

Heads Up!

By Donna Kaminskus

Have you heard a gym instructor shout "Heads Up?" That's a tip-off that the class is tiring, for the first sign of fatigue is a slouched posture, drooping shoulders and sagging chin.

Secretaries, businesswomen, students as well as the busy housewives...

Good posture is a MUST today, for it makes for better appearance. Good-looking clothes are doubly attractive on a well-built, well-poised figure.

While sitting, standing, and walking keep "posture conscious"! Good posture is a MUST today, for it makes for better appearance.

I'll listen! BUT only to the first six lines. "You've heard of 'BIRUTIS KALNAS' in Lithuania. Haven't you?"

"Now that you mention it! Yes, in school, but I don't remember because it never interested me."

"Well, listen as I read you this: "Birutis Kalnas' less than a kilometer south of Palanga is known to every Lithuanian because it is associated with the most beloved feminine figure in Lithuanian history and legend that of the Duchesse Birute."

"It's a hill of about 70 meters high, overgrown with pines. It is the only real hill for miles around and from the oldest times was held sacred. Here burned the sacred fire of oak wood, tended night and day by the "Vaidilutes" — Vostal Virgins — among whom, towards the middle of the XIVth century was a beautiful novice called Birute."

On the very day that she was to be finally consecrated as a "vaidilute", Kestutis, son of the reigning Grand Duke of Lithuania met her, loved her and asked her to be his wife. Birute refused but Kestutis was not to be balked."

"That's the sixth line! Want me to stop?" "No, goodness, tell me what happened finally."

"That night before, rather, just as the High Priest prepared to throw the sacred white robe over Birute's head thereby vowing her eternal virginity Kestutis appeared, throw the robe on the sacred fire and seizing Birute, carried her off to be his wife. The horror-stricken priests prophesied that the direct woe would result because of the sacrifice, that with their children would end the glory of Lithuania. The prophecy, unfortunately, was amply fulfilled: Lithuania was to be a petty partisan politics."

Illustration with text: 'These truths are self-evident...' 'Each high priestess has an irreplaceable river or stream flowing in her veins...' 'RUSSIAN PRINCESS ELIZABETH GALITZIN convert Sacred Heart Nun, died in Louisville, in 1945 of yellow fever contracted while nursing sick poor.'

(Kubalitis from page 2) Fascism, no matter where it rears its ugly head, material and moral support of the groups which are leading the fight for Lithuania's freedom; and, above all, independent Lithuania after coordination of action and sincere cooperation and harmony between these groups.

We cannot emphasize too strongly how important and essential this last means is. It is a sad fact that we now have two separate groups in this country working independently toward the same goal — Lithuania's liberation. The American Lithuanian public has frequently read elaborate public statements from both groups as to why a common movement has not been found between them. The public is not interested in explanations, and it has every right to expect unity of action.

The American Lithuanian public has given generous financial and moral support to both the A.L.T. and the M.S.L.J. It has taken with a grain of salt the charges and counter-charges which have flown between the two groups. If a common ground of action, however, is not soon found, it will have every right to demand an accounting of those who are using the tragedy of Lithuania as a football to be kicked around in the interests of petty partisan politics.

"Draugas" Concert And Dance Feb. 10th Was An Overwhelming Success

1600 PEOPLE JAM ST. AGNES' AUDITORIUM TO WITNESS COLORFUL CONCERT AT BIGGEST HIT OF THE SEASON. The "Draugas" annual Concert and Dance held at St. Agnes' Auditorium, Sunday, Feb. 10th turned out to be a overwhelming success.

OPRETTA

Perhaps the most enjoyable portion of the evening was the masterly presentation of the colorful musical comedy "The Battered Bride" (Sveikam Ligos Nelkabi) The roles were very deftly played by Genevieve Giedraitis (as AGUTE), Anthony Kaminskis (as ANUKAS), Bruno Brukinis-Brooks (as JOKOBAS) and Kazys Ve Seta (as SIMAS).

The concert and dance was arranged as a part of the celebration commemorating the 30th anniversary of "Draugas" as a daily, and in the words of those who were present Sunday, it sure was a "whopper". The grand success of the whole affair is a fitting tribute to the coordination and smooth cooperation between artists, fellow workers, the management and the splendid, enthusiastic response of the general public. WE THANK YOU!

History Really Can Be Romantic

Mary Francis Siedlik

"Oh, there you are Ann with a book again. What's the uninteresting book about this time?" "I should really ignore you, Thoroso, when you come in here the first thing in the morning insulting me. Why, I don't become angry with you is beyond my understanding. I want you to know this is a very interesting book."

St. Casimir's Alumnae Dance February 16th

COMMENTARIES

Edward J. Kubaltis

NEW year ago, we wrote an article on the occasion of the 27th anniversary of the Declaration of Lithuanian Independence that evoked considerable criticism from some quarters for its pessimistic tone. In it we had written, in effect, that "... we may as well stop eating our hearts out with false hopes; Lithuania will not be free and independent when this war ends in victory for the allied nations." We were told that such a blunt opinion on Lithuania's chances for regaining her freedom was a disgrace to her cause. We were told that the best policy to follow was to landily and uncompromisingly take it for granted that Lithuania's reconstruction as a free and independent republic was all but an accomplished fact, and that we should not admit any other possibility. Didn't we remember that President Roosevelt had stated that Lithuania's independence was not lost, but only temporarily set aside? Hadn't we read the Atlantic Charter? Had we so soon forgotten that the U. S. State Department had repeatedly stated its position that the Soviet occupation of Lithuania would not be recognized and that the Lithuanian Minister and Consuls would continue to be recognized? When we pointed out the ominous silence concerning Lithuania at the Yalta Conference, we were reassured. Ah, but wait till the war ends! You will see, how quickly the other Allied governments will crack down on Soviet Russia and force her to leave Lithuania!

Our purpose, of course, was not pessimism for its own gloomy sake. Our purpose was to try to convince American Lithuanians that it was time for them to desist from the sweet day-dreaming in which they were indulging and realize once and for all that no knight was going to ride forth from the White House or the State Department to free Lithuania from the clutches of the Red Dragon. The cause of Lithuania's freedom was in no one else's hands but our very own. If each of us individually did not work wholeheartedly for it, then neither President Roosevelt, the State Department, the A.L.F., the Missions, nor any other agency or individual was going to do the work for us.

It did not take any mystic means sources of information or any special talent as an analyst of international affairs to foresee that victory for the forces of democracy and freedom would bring neither democracy nor freedom to Lithuania. Because of her consistent record for treachery in the past, any person with the average child's intelligence could see that Soviet Russia's fervent and touching verbal professions of love for truth, justice and right were motivated by her need for our military aid and nothing else. Her fighting in our common cause against Hitler was a mere military necessity and coincidence and had nothing to do with sincere abhorrence of oppression and totalitarianism. Only the most naive person would even consider that Soviet Russia's endeavor that Soviet Russia's eleventh hour entry into our war against the Japanese had the slightest effect on the victory which had already been won by our American forces alone.

Through Soviet Russia had her back against the wall and defied starting her in the face until we gave her guns, ammunition and supplies to enable her to turn the Nazis back — the experience did not teach her a single lesson, and she emerged from that brink of certain disaster more ruthless, arrogant, and treacherous than ever before.

The Red Fascists of Moscow, who so glibly mouth beautiful phrases about "liberation", "freedom", "democracy", etc., never once had the slightest intention of yielding any territory which they had grabbed from others. Stalin and Hitler divided Poland between them. The Brown Fascist is gone, but the Red Fascist still has not given up one foot of Polish territory. He has taken half of it outright, and has installed a puppet government to rule the other half for him. Stalin seized the Baltic States with the permission of Hitler. By doing so, he placed the infamous stamp of Nazi approval on an act of outright international gangsterism. By doing so, he violated every pledge and treaty he had made with these countries. Hitler is today an infamous memory, but Stalin has not yielded one foot of his loot in the Baltic States. And the reign of terror that has been inaugurated in these countries by the Red Fascist invaders is marked by an unending succession of crimes and World War II ended with no parallel in world history.

It is not that we are not aware of the fact that the Lithuanian people have suffered throughout the centuries pale into insignificance that evoked considerable criticism from some quarters for its pessimistic tone. In it we had written, in effect, that "... we may as well stop eating our hearts out with false hopes; Lithuania will not be free and independent when this war ends in victory for the allied nations." We were told that such a blunt opinion on Lithuania's chances for regaining her freedom was a disgrace to her cause. We were told that the best policy to follow was to landily and uncompromisingly take it for granted that Lithuania's reconstruction as a free and independent republic was all but an accomplished fact, and that we should not admit any other possibility. Had we so soon forgotten that the U. S. State Department had repeatedly stated its position that the Soviet occupation of Lithuania would not be recognized and that the Lithuanian Minister and Consuls would continue to be recognized? When we pointed out the ominous silence concerning Lithuania at the Yalta Conference, we were reassured. Ah, but wait till the war ends! You will see, how quickly the other Allied governments will crack down on Soviet Russia and force her to leave Lithuania!

Talking It Over There Are No Enemy Children...

WE did not fight a war with children. It was not at the toyheads of leading German infants that our soldiers fired their rifles. They did not throw grenades into the dark-eyes of Italian bambinos. No Marine aimed his flame-thrower at the smiling face of a chubby Jap baby. Yet it is these children who were being killed by the war.

This winter Europe and the Orient starve. Every news report, every letter from abroad, every returning soldier, sailor, and marine tells the same story: "The children whom we fought to free, the children for whom our men died to build a better world are being killed by the after-effects of the war."

Your're Sure To Be Gay-Hearted After Reading This Book

Lucy Valatka

If you are feeling like a super-dehydrated prune these days; if you are depressed because you knew only ninety-nine of the hundred questions in your chemistry exam - treat yourself to a book that will send your spirits soaring in practically no time at all. The book is a treasury of humor called "With a Merry Heart" containing works of your favorite Catholic authors.

Professor Phelan, who that the Chinese presented, edited and compiled this gem of "The Merry Widow" is a book, explains in his titled, "He dead — she introduction, that humor-glad!"

The poetry in this book is too good to miss. If you are a poet, you will find it a life, can afford to treat you one who thinks poetry is a trivial thing in a playful manner. While poets reach God through the medium of a rose, and religionists through the medium of a Redeemer, humorists often reach God by way of Mickey Mouse.

In the fiction, and short story section, Doran Hurley writes of the Cardinal's visit to The Old Parish, and how old Aunt Bridget fed him boiled ham, cabbage, and bread pudding, instead of the fancy French dishes her niece, Bessie, had planned. He must have liked her meals, for when he was about to leave, he kissed her cheek and told her that she reminded him of his Mother.

In another section, Austin O'Malley wonders why the word for tongue is feminine in Greek, Latin, Gaelic, Italian, Spanish, French, and German... Here too, West-brook Pegler yields his satirical wit in a selection from "Y.A.H't Right, and Oscar, the first comic soldier of World War II, writes to his Mom in Oscar Reports on his second in the Michigan M.A. K.
